Two Ways to Live.

There are two ways to live on earth—
Two ways to judge—
For all things here have double birth—
A right and wrong—a false and true!

Give me the home where kindness dwells
To make that sweet which smooths small
Where every life is full of peace,
And every mind has cause for cheer.

Where flowers live in glad exchange
Of blossoms, free from vain expense;
Where thoughts beyond their usual range
Nor wise desires give offense.

Who in a neighbor's fortune finds
No wish to improve—no cause to grieve;
Who feels no need to boast or brag,
To envy yet another's gain.

Who does not of the morning find
Ambition's feverish dream—
The bitter pangs of wounded pride,
Nor fretting power that shatters sleep.

Where peace dwells in all things,
Love's wealth is all the wealth to choose;
For all that man can purchase more
Are sands, it is no loss to lose.

Such brings wherever they go,
Find sought to please or to cheat—
These contented souls but to show
Perpetual modes of leading life.

While others in the endless round
Of daily wants and daily care,
Can yet cut flowers from common ground,
And gather joy the joy they share!

Oh! happy they who happy make—
Who, in content, still themselves are kind;
Who smile in all things for their own sake,
And strive in all things for the best!—Selected.

[From a small manuscript monthly, known as the Wreath, we extract the following article, describing the adventures of a velocipede, in a humorous way. It appears altogether too good to slumber almost unobserved where it was, and we take the liberty to transfer it, without permission, to our columns.]

My Experience with a Bicycle.

Receiving the loan of a velocipede day yesterday evening, and being in full sympathy with the progressive instincts of the age, I immediately commenced to learn to ride it. In order that my readers may more perfectly understand the difficulties involved in so doing, let me first remark on a few of the tricks that the animal is subjected to: first and worst, it betrays an unmanageable disposition to lie down in the middle of the street or anywhere, and at all times and with-out warning. If it is pleased to stand upright and to move forward, it exhibits great delight in running into the nearest fence and jamming the rider's legs after the manner of Balaam's ass. It also often turns, what would be its head if it was a horse, back as if to bite the rider's feet, in reality to rub the dust off from the wheel rim on to his pants. Thus altogether it is quite unmanageable till one gets used to it. At first I found much difficulty in keeping my balance, but with the aid of a friend who ran alongside holding on to the velocipede by the back I made some progress in the art in the first hour, receiving, however, a few trivial falls. At length gaining confidence in myself I dispensed with all assistance and decided that the time had come to get a little fun out of the thing. After some trouble I got a fair start and thinking that the faster I went the less likely to tip over, I devoted my whole strength to the pedals and was just attaining to a high rate of speed, when the driving wheel suddenly turned at right angles to our line of motion, and in less than the twinkling of an eye, I was lying on my face in the road, with my mouth full of gravel, my elbows skinned and holes through both of my trousers knees. The bicycle was standing over me or rather sitting on top of me with its gear somewhat mixed up, wearing an air of such discomfort that my reasonable feelings vanished, and I felt disposed to look at the affair in the light of a good joke. I readjusted myself, cleaned the black sand out of my mouth, lamed myself a little, dusted my hat against a fence rail, and then turned to the velocipede and adjusted that, unwound its front wheel and was ready for a new trial, a calmer and wiser man. As I lifted my eyes I was surprised to find myself completely surrounded by a crowd of spectators watching me with an interest which increased the whiteness of their eyes to an extent nearly two fold. I now felt in a measure the responsibility of my position thus made in a manner public, and carefully and with becoming dignity remounted, and started off with a self-possession that surprised me, and gave great promise of success; alas, for this world! In trying to turn out for an approaching carriage I accidentally ran off the road on to a gradual slope, down which the velocipede trundled faster and faster in spite of my desperate but unaided efforts to steer it elsewhere, or to stop it, or dismounting or other, what exactly I have now but a very indistinct recollection: down the hill we rushed at a most dangerous speed, swaying from side to side like an incriminated man-of-war on horse-back, right toward a two-path that lay calm and serene at the foot of the slope. My memory of what followed is much blurred: a general, unrelentless and unpleasant impression, which I am as yet unable to analyze, of whirling spears, pedals, bumps, bumps, shouts, hats, the air, stars, a shock, cold water and raw tar. Two things I remember distinctly—the instant before earthly impressions ceased to act on my senses of sight and hearing—I heard a shout from the fifty spectators before whom I had the honor to be performing and saw them struggling down the hill toward me; while the wretched velocipede, the author of all this trouble, was quietly standing on its head and leaning against a post that stood in the bank of the path. Never can I forget my sensations as with my left eye, which was open, and got your paper, ink and pen, and say these words into all men:

My dear friends, I wish to tell you, and to your wife and daughters too, my prices they shall be so low that each and every one of you shall be able to do as his good wife advised, and in the paper advertised. Crowds came and bought off all he had; his notes were paid his dreams were glad, and he told you to this day how well did your paper, ink and pen, and say these words into all men:
